TODAY’S OBSERVED FIRE BEHAVIOR:

Oak Glen III - The fire behavior during the night is best described as smoldering and creeping with minimal perimeter growth. The recorded fire history has shown no fires in this area for 85+ years. The fuel bed of chamise and live oak have increased the live to dead fuel ratio and will contribute to today's fire activity. The main carrier of the fire is the leaf litter under the brush canopy. There is a concern for rolling material, snags, and down canyon winds which have been occurring between 2000 and 2200. There is a chance of thunderstorms after 1000 hours with gusts up to 40 mph. These winds would dramatically influence fire behavior.
